Between 1920 and 1923, 192 new industries settled in Louisville, and the city, once again in a confident mood, could boast that among its plants seven were the largest of their kind in the world, six were the largest in the nation, and 18 the largest in the South. Louisville rose to become the 22d city in the United States in value of manufactured products, and to 24th place in population with 234,891 residents.

The prosperity showed in many ways. In 1922, Radio Station WHAS, the first in Kentucky, went on the air; Bowman Field opened as an airport; the Galt House was razed to make way for the Belknap Hardware and Manufacturing Company.

From 1923 to 1927, 119 other new industries came to the city. An average of 5,000 new homes were built annually; new hotels and skyscraper office buildings were erected downtown; $1,500,000 was subscribed locally to build a War Memorial Auditorium; the Speed Art Museum was opened; Macauley's Theater was torn down and the site used for an addition to the Starks Building.

As part and parcel of the city's growth, early in 1929 the Louisville Gas and Electric Company, now charged solely with meeting the community's growing needs, completed the second underground natural gas storage area in the nation. Completion of this storage area, beneath Muldraugh Hill, was significant because it insured the city adequate gas the year around. Even during the summer, when the demand

SPEEDY PEACE AIM OF NEW GOVERNMENT

The terms of the armistice, it was announced, will not be made public until later. Military men here, however, expect it to be details that they include immediate cessation of the German military forces in France, Belgium and Alsace-Lorraine. Surrendering and disarming of all German troops.

Occupations by the allied and American forces of all strategic points in Germany as well as the removal of a national government.

Delivery of lists of the German high seas fleet and a complete list of submarines to the allied and American naval forces.

THE END OF THE WAR

WORLD WAR I ENDED, and Louisville celebrated as it never had celebrated any event before. Real ending of the war was four days after a "false" armistice.
